

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

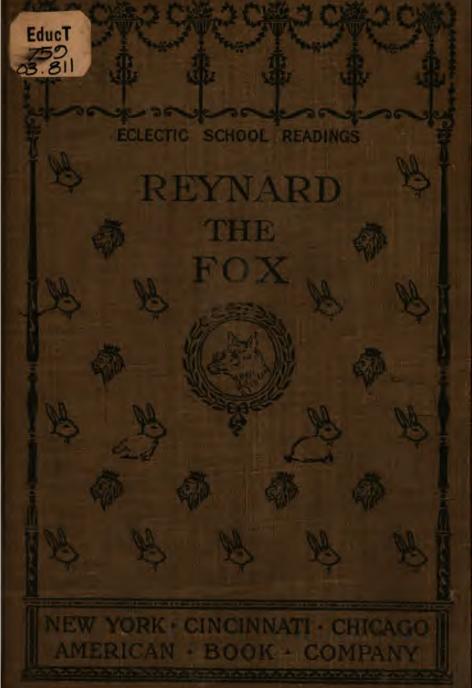

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THIS text, as a beginner's first reading book, introduces three striking features which, to experienced primary teachers, will commend themselves as essential,—repetition of words which pupils have already learned to recognize, action of intrinsic interest calling for thought, and a continuous story.

There are two stages, or two phases, in the child's struggle of learning to read. One is to recognize words, or "word-calling," and the other is the thinking of what these words mean. They are distinct mental processes, and many of us are discovering that it is most economical in time and effort to separate these in teaching. learning to recognize printed words, as much of the attention as possible must be centered upon this merely mechanical process. With repetition, the act of "calling" the word when its printed form is presented to the eye, becomes ever more and more automatic and requires less Then begins the work of associating this attention. word with images and other thoughts, which constitute "thinking" the word. The essential purpose of our primers is to establish word recognition, but the sentences of which they are composed do not contain material of intrinsic interest to the child. After the mere recognition of a limited vocabulary is mastered, there is need for a book which shall, by the interesting plot and images, associate these words with thought. This book is constructed to meet this latter purpose. It is intended to be taken up after the pupil has mastered a primer.

Introductory Note

The number of words contained in the book is over seven thousand, but the number of different words is only about four hundred. Therefore, there is necessarily constant repetition, and the attention is attracted, not to the words as forms, but to the thought which they excite. The utmost care has been given to the selection of words which pupils have learned in their primers. To this end the words in some ten of the primers in general use have been tabulated, and so far as at all possible the words most common to these have been woven into "Reynard the Fox." The book, therefore, offers repetition of known words in connection with a story so interesting that the child is compelled to think what he reads.

The need for a story which should be continuous and can sustain the interest of the pupil from day to day has been one which all primary teachers have keenly felt. Each day's lesson hitches upon the previous one, and the fortunes of the characters are followed with increasing interest.

In constructing the story, Miss Smythe has told each chapter to her receiving class from day to day, and the pupils have given it back to her. Their reactions, points of interest, and language have all been matters of careful note before she has committed herself to writing. I may say, from personal observation of Miss Smythe as a children's story-teller, that she possesses the knack to a singular degree, and her experience has given her rare intuition of the salient elements of a child's story.

"Reynard the Fox," in typewritten form, has been given to the pupils of the Training School of San Francisco State Normal with most marked success.

SAN FRANCISCO STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE

THE scope of this little reader has been so ably set forth by Dr. Burk that further explanation seems unnecessary. A few words, however, relative to the ending of this adaptation of "Reynard the Fox" may be in order.

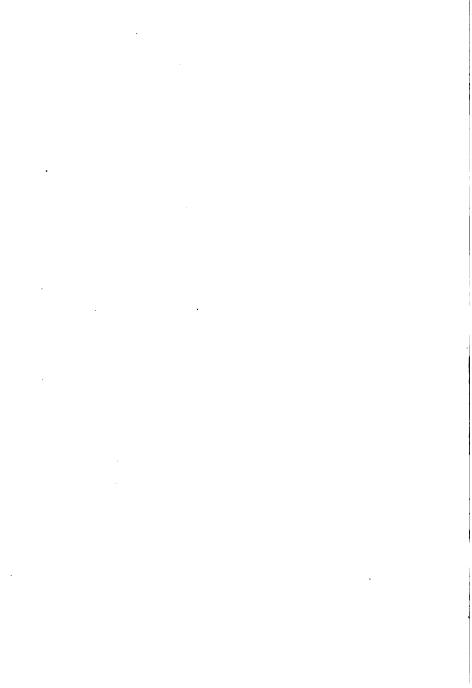

The moral ending of the classical story is not one to be given to children. On a recent occasion, having given the story to a low third grade class, it was left at the duel for the class to write the ending. The class, with one exception, punished the recreant Fox severely,—even cruelly,—and the majority with death.

The ending appended to this version, written by an eight-year-old girl, was chosen for its happy effect on the interested little readers who had followed so closely the fortunes of Reynard and those associated with him.

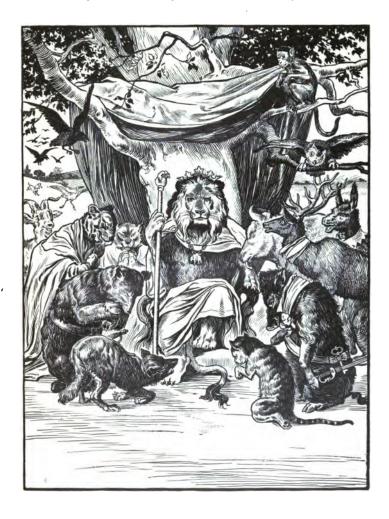

This adaptation has been prepared, believing that the children who become acquainted with the wily Fox will in later years take keen enjoyment in the classical story.

REYNARD THE FOX

Reynard animals dirt others even mean

THE KING'S PARTY

The Lion was the King of all the animals.

One day the King gave a party.

He wanted all the animals to come to it.

The Wolf, the Bear, and nearly all the others were there.

Even the birds came.

One animal did not come.

That was Reynard the Fox.

The Wolf walked up to the King.

He said, "O King, you wanted us all to come to your party.

And we are all here but one.

The King's Party

That one is Reynard the Fox.

He never does what you tell him to do.

I will tell you what he did to me.

He went to my house when I was not at home.

He put dirt into my babies' eyes.

And now they cannot see.

Look at them."

Puss angry afraid walk Fido should hungry mill

FIDO'S STORY

Then little Fido came up to the King.

He was a pretty little dog.

He said, "O King, let me tell you what Reynard did to me."

We are all afraid of him.

One day I went for a walk.

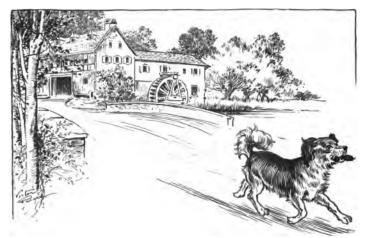

I came to a mill.

I saw some meat there, and I took it.

It was all I had to eat; and I was very hungry.

But Reynard took it away from me. It was not his.

Fido's Story

It was mine, and it was all I had." Then Puss came up.

He said, "O King, even you may be afraid of Reynard.

He will hurt any one he can.

But I do think Fido should keep still about that meat.

The meat was mine.

And I am the one to be angry about it."

Bunny right crying turn

THE PANTHER'S STORY

Then it was the Panther's turn to speak.

He said, "O King, I will tell you of Reynard the Fox.

I will tell you what he did to little Bunny.

One day I was walking in the road.

I heard some one crying near me.

I looked to see who it was.

And there Reynard had poor little Bunny by the ears.

He held him by the ears and hit him.

The Panther's Story

He hit him again and again.

If I had not come up just at the right time, Reynard would have killed him.

Poor little Bunny!

He never hurts any one. Look at him.

See where Reynard hurt him.

This is not the right way to do. Is it, O King?"

Badger cousin such about almost sly

THE BADGER'S STORY

Then Reynard's cousin, the Badger, came up.

The Badger was almost as sly as Reynard.

He said, "O King, I want to say something.

It is not right to say bad things about those who are not here. Do you think so?

My dear cousin Reynard is at home.

Do you think such things would be said if he were here?

I think not.

The Badger's Story

And who say these bad things about him?

The Wolf is one.

Has he the right to do this? Is he so good?

I can tell you something about the Wolf.

I will tell you how mean he was to the Fox.

Hear my story."

THE FOX AND THE WOLF

"A long time ago the Fox and the Wolf were friends.

One day the Wolf came to see the Fox.

The Wolf was hungry. He is always hungry.

So he said that he wanted something to eat.

The Fox said, 'I haven't anything to eat. But I know where we can get a fat pig.

The Farmer killed it to-day. It hangs up in the barn, over there by the road.

The Fox and the Wolf

Come with me.'

So they went together to get the pig.

'Now,' said Reynard, 'you wait by the tree.

I will go into the barn and throw the pig out of the window.

Then you must run very quickly and get it.

But you must give me half."

The Wolf took it and ran away. But the dogs heard Reynard and ran out.

They bit him, but he got away at last.

When Reynard came to the Wolf, he told him how the dogs had hurt him.

Then he said, 'Where is my half of the pig?

Give it to me.'

The Wolf said, 'I have kept the best for you.

Here it is.'

What do you think he gave Reynard?

Only a piece of wood!

For he had eaten all the meat. And poor Reynard did not get any that day.

Do you think that was right?"

REYNARD AND THE FISH

"At another time the Wolf wanted some fish.

He went to Reynard and said, 'Reynard, I am hungry, I want some fish to eat.'

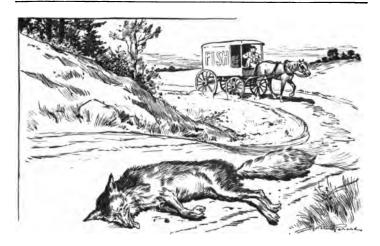

Reynard said, 'Well, we will get some.

The fish-wagon will come on this road to-day.

We can get all the fish we want.' So they went down the road.

The Fox lay down in the road. He kept very still. He looked just like a dead Fox.

Reynard and the Fish

Then the fish-wagon came along. The man saw the Fox.

He said, 'There is a dead Fox in the road.

That is good. I shall take him home.

His skin will make me a good cap.'

So he threw Reynard into his wagon and went on."

"Reynard lay in the wagon. He was still a little while.

Then, when the man was not looking, he jumped up.

Reynard and the Fish

He threw all the fish out of the wagon.

The Wolf ran behind and caught the fish as Reynard threw them out.

At last Reynard jumped out of the wagon.

He ran to the Wolf and said, 'Where is my half? I want some fish, too.'

What do you think the Wolf did then?

He said, 'Here, Reynard, this is for you.'

And he gave him the bones. He had eaten all the fish.

There was not one for Reynard. Is that right, O King?"

REYNARD AND BUNNY

Then the Badger said, "Shall I tell you any more? I can not say anything good. The Panther's story about Bunny makes me laugh.

What does the Panther know about it? Yes, my cousin did have Bunny by the ears.

But let me tell you why.

Reynard is Bunny's teacher. Bunny wanted Reynard to teach him to sing.

But Bunny could not get the tune.

Then Reynard hit him on the ears. I think that is all right if Bunny could not sing, don't you?

Reynard and Bunny

Then I should think that Fido would keep still about that meat. He stole it. Puss says so.

So Reynard had a right to take it away from him, I think.

I must say, O King, that my cousin is very good.

Let him come here, and you will see."

Then the Badger went away.

Scratchfoot twenty-four Rooster noise children

THE ROOSTER'S STORY

Just then there was a great noise. All looked to see what it was.

There was the Rooster with some Hens. They were carrying a little dead Hen.

It was Scratchfoot. Her head was gone.

The Rooster said, "O King, hear me. See what Reynard has done.

A few days ago I was happy. I had twenty-four pretty children.

They were all big and strong. But I was afraid of the Fox and kept them at home.

The Rooster's Story

One day Reynard came to see me.

He said, 'Dear Rooster, let us be friends.

I am not going to kill any more. I am going to be good.

Your children need not be afraid of me.

Let them play in the road. I will not hurt them.'-"

"I was very glad to hear this. My children were, too.

They ran out in the road. They went into the woods.

Then what did that Fox do? He jumped out. He caught my children, one by one.

To-day he killed my dear little Scratchfoot." And the Rooster and the Hens cried and cried.

The King looked very angry. He said, "This is very bad. I am sorry to hear all this, good Rooster. But I can not give you back your little Scratchfoot.

We can only bury her now. We will put a white stone at her head. On it we will say,

She was a good little Hen. She lies here, killed by Reynard."

BRUIN GOES FOR REYNARD

Then the King said, "My friends, I want you to help me. We can not let Reynard do so. He must come here."

So he said to the Bear, "Bruin, you must go for Reynard. Make him come back with you."

Then Bruin went for Reynard the Fox. It took him a long time, for it was a long way.

At last he came to the woods where Reynard hunted. Reynard had a fine house there.

Here Reynard lived with his wife and two little sons. They had all they wanted to eat and were happy.

When Bruin came to the house, the door was shut. No one came to open it.

At last he called out, "Cousin Reynard, are you at home? It is Bruin. The King wants you. He will kill you if you do not come."

BRUIN AT REYNARD'S HOUSE

Reynard heard all the Bear had to say. He laughed to himself.

He said, "I will send Bruin home soon.

He will not want me with him long."

So he went to the door.

"Why, Cousin Bruin, is that you?" he said. "I am very glad to see you.

Did you come all the way for me? How good of you!

But why did 'not the King send some one else? It was too far for you.

You are very tired. See how dusty your coat is! And your hair is all wet.

Come in, come in. You must rest to-night.

Are you very hungry? I wish I had something for you to eat. But you know how poor I am. I will go and see what I can find for you."

BRUIN GOES FOR HONEY

"Well, I can give you only a little honey. And I know you do not like that."

"Honey!" said the Bear, "I like it better than anything else. Oh, give me some honey."

"Do you like honey so well?" said Reynard. "I am glad, for I can give you all you want. Come with me. It is not far. The Farmer has more honey than you can eat."

"Let us go, then," said the Bear. And they went for the honey.

It was night, and Reynard knew the Farmer was in bed.

That day the Farmer had cut down a tree and made a trap.

The sly Fox took the hungry Bear to the trap.

He said, "My dear Bruin, here is honey. Put your nose far down into that log. Do not eat too much. It is very sweet."

The Bear put his fore paws into the trap. He put in his head up to his ears. Then sly Reynard pulled the trap and Bruin was caught.

THE FARMER HEARS BRUIN

Bruin could not get away. His paws hurt him so that he cried out.

He said to the Fox, "Come, Reynard, and get me out."

But Reynard only laughed and ran away.

He said, "Have a good time, Bruin. Eat all you want."

Bruin made so much noise that the Farmer heard him.

He jumped out of bed and took his ax.

When he saw the Bear, he ran to get his men.

"Come," he said, "a Bear is in

Then he pulled again as hard as he could.

This time he got his head out of the trap.

He gave another pull, and got his paws out. But his claws were left in the trap.

His head and paws were all bloody.

His head and paws hurt him so that he ran to the river. It was near by.

He thought the cold water would help him.

All the men ran after the Bear. They hit him with sticks and stones.

Just then the Cook fell into the river.

Some one cried, "See, the Cook is in the water. We must get her out!"

So they left the Bear and ran to help the Cook.

BRUIN GETS AWAY

It was a good thing for Bruin. While they were helping the Cook, he got away.

But he could not go very fast. His feet were very sore.

His ears and eyes hurt him so he could neither hear nor see.

So he fell into the water. He said to himself, "Now I shall die, for I cannot swim."

But he did not die.

He went down the river a little way.

Then he went over and got out on the other side.

Bruin gets Away

He lay down to rest, for he was very tired.

He looked up, and there was Reynard.

Reynard had just killed a hen, and he wanted a drink. He did not see Bruin.

He said to himself, "Well, I shall never see that Bear again. How glad I am I took him to the trap!"

He said, "Why, Bruin, what are you doing here? Where did you get your red cap? I never saw you with it on before.

Bruin did not stay to hear more. He felt too sick to go on. But he went.

His feet hurt so, that it took him a long time to get to the King.

The King said, "Is that Bruin? How sick he looks!

When he came to the house, Reynard was outside.

Reynard said, "Why, Puss, is that you? I am glad to see you."

But he told a lie, for he was not glad.

He said to himself, "Puss has come for me to go to the King. But I must send him away."

Then he said aloud, "I know what you have come for, Puss. You want me to go to the King.

Well, you stay all night. Then I will go with you.

I would not go with Bruin. I was afraid of him. He is so big and cross. But I like you.

You must have something to eat. What shall I get for you? I have some honey. Do you like honey?"

"No," said Puss, "I do not like honey. But I would like a good fat mouse."

PUSS AT REYNARD'S

"Do you like to eat mice?" said Reynard.

"Well, I can give you all you want.

They are in the Farmer's barn. Come, let us go."

So they went to the barn.

Reynard had made a hole under the barn.

He had gone in this way to get the Farmer's chickens.

Jack, the Farmer's boy, found this out.

So he made a trap to catch the Fox.

Puss at Reynard's

Reynard had seen the trap that day.

When they came to the barn, Reynard said, "Do you hear the mice, Puss? Just hear their little feet! There are so many of them. You could not carry them all in two wagons.

Now this is the way. Go in this hole."

But Puss was afraid. He said, "You go in, Reynard."

So Puss jumped into the hole. Then how he cried! He was in the trap.

But bad Reynard ran away.

Puss made so much noise that little Jack heard him.

He ran to the barn and saw Puss in the trap.

He said, "Now I have the one who caught my chickens."

And he hit poor Puss again and again,

Reynard saw it and was very glad.

He said, "Puss is dead now. He will not come for me again."

But Puss was not dead.

He jumped up and ran away. He was all bloody and sore, but he could run.

THE BADGER GOES FOR REYNARD

He came crying to the King and told his story.

The King was very angry when he heard it.

He said, "Reynard is a bad Fox. He is too bad to live. I will have him killed."

Then the Badger came to the King.

He said, "Will you kill Reynard without hearing his story? Let me go for him. I can get him."

The King said, "Go and get him."

So the Badger went for Reynard the Fox.

At last he came to Reynard's house.

He called out, "Open the door, Reynard, for it is I.

Let me in. I have something to say to you."

Reynard opened the door and looked out.

When he saw the Badger he said, "Come in, Cousin. I am glad to see you."

They were glad to see the Badger.

- "I have come from the King," said the Badger.
 - "I know it," said Reynard.
- "And I have come for you," said the Badger.
 - "I know it," said Reynard.
- "Don't you think it is time for you to do what the King wants?" said the Badger.
- "Yes," said Reynard, "I do. You stay here to-night.

Then I will go with you to the King."

So the Badger said, "That will do."

Then they all ate their supper and had a good time.

When it was night they went to bed.

And he said to the little ones, "Be good children. Do what your mother tells you.

When I come back, I'll bring you something."

Then the Badger and Reynard went off.

On the way, Reynard said, "What will the King do to me?

Reynard goes to the King

I am afraid of him.

I was very mean to Puss and to Bruin. I have been as bad as they say."

And he told him all.

Then Reynard said, "I feel better now."

"Be still," said the King, "you talk too much.

Reynard said, "O King, I do love you.

I want to do as you say.

Is it my fault that the Farmer hurt Bruin?

I told him to take care, but he would not. And it was the same with Puss."

That was the way Reynard talked. When the other animals told how mean he was, he told more lies.

All went to see them hang Reynard.

Bruin was afraid he would get away, so he kept very near.

At last they came to the place. They put a rope around Reynard's neck, and Puss climbed the tree.

Reynard and the Rope

Then Reynard said to himself, "I am afraid I can not get away this time. But I shall try."

The King said, "You may speak."

All the wolves said they would come. All the cats and bears said they would fight, too.

My father was to pay them. But they would not come till they had their pay.

When my father went to get the gold, it was gone. So he could not pay the animals, and they would not come.

That is the way I helped you.

Now I am going to die, and you may have the gold. Then you will know how I love you."

The Queen said, "I think Reynard tells the truth this time."

"I think so, too," said the King.
"I will let him go."

Then the King said, "Take Bruin and Puss and the Wolf to jail."

Reynard's friends were glad when they heard this.

But the Wolf said to Bruin, "You see Reynard's lies have helped him again."

Then the King called Reynard to him. He said, "Now, Reynard, where is the gold?"

Reynard said, "I will tell you. You go down this road till you come to a big wood. It is a long way from here.

In this wood there is a spring. You go by the spring.

Then you will come to a bush. You must go by the bush.

Then you will come to a lonely place. Only an Owl lives there.

In this lonely place you will see two trees. Then you will be near the cave. The cave is under the trees.

I would like to go with you, but I can not."

REYNARD GOES HOME

The King said, "You will have to go with me, Reynard. I can not find the place alone."

Reynard did not like to hear this.

He said, "I can not go, but there is Bunny.

He knows the way to the big wood. He can go.

Shall I call him?"

"Do so," said the King.

Reynard called, "Bunny, come here."

And Bunny came.

Reynard goes Home

"Do you know the way to the big wood?" said Reynard.

"Oh, yes," said Bunny. "I have been there many times."

"You may go home, Reynard. Bunny will take me to the cave."

Then the King told some of the animals to go a little way with Reynard.

BUNNY AT REYNARD'S

Bruin and Puss could not go, for they were in jail. They were glad they did not have to go.

Bunny and Billy the Goat went. Some other animals went, too.

By and by some of the animals said, "We must go back now."

Reynard said, "O Bunny, don't go back.

You and Billy come with me. I like you both. You are so good and kind. You never kill anything. You can help me to be good."

So Billy and Bunny went with him.

Bunny at Reynard's

At last they came to Reynard's house.

Then Reynard said to the Goat, "Billy, you stay out here. See how much grass there is! You may eat all you want.

I want Bunny to go into the house with me. My wife will want to see him."

Bunny was afraid not to go in, so he went.

POOR BUNNY

Pretty soon, Reynard said to his wife, "Do you see that Rabbit? The King gave him to me."

Then poor little Bunny was very much afraid.

He tried to run away, but Reynard caught him.

Bunny cried out, "Help, Billy! Help!"

He called again and again.

But Reynard bit him in the neck and killed him.

Then Reynard said to his wife, "Come, we will eat the Rabbit. He is fat and good to eat."

Poor Bunny

By and by, Billy the Goat came to the door.

He called out to the Rabbit, and said, "Come, Bunny, it is time to go home."

Reynard went to the door.

He said, "You may go home, Billy. Bunny is going to stay with us to-night."

"I thought you would hear him. Come in. I will tell you all about it."

"No," said Billy, "I will stay here."

"Very well," said Reynard, "I shall tell you anyway.

I had just told my wife I was going away.

She felt so bad that she cried out and fell down.

Then Bunny was afraid she was going to die, and he called to you. He said, 'Help, Billy!'

Why, Billy, I wouldn't hurt Bunny for anything. I love him too much to hurt him.

Now, Billy, will you do something for me?

I want you to take a letter to the King. He told me to send it to him."

REYNARD TIES THE BAG

"I am afraid I shall lose it," said Billy. "I have no bag to put it in."

"That is so, Billy," said Reynard.

"But here is a bag for you.

It is a good one, and you may have it."

So the Goat said, "I will take the letter, Reynard."

Then Reynard went into the house.

He put poor Bunny's head into the bag.

But Reynard did not want Billy to know that Bunny was dead.

Reynard ties the Bag

When he came out he said, "Here is the bag, Billy. Take it with you.

Hang it on your neck, but do not look into it.

The King told me how to tie it. He will know if you look in.

It will be bad for you if you look into it.

If you do as I tell you, the King will pay you well."

"No," said Reynard, "he can't go. He is not well and has gone to bed."

"Good-by, then," said the Goat. And he ran off.

When the King saw him, he said, "I am glad to see you again, Billy. But what does this mean? You have Reynard's bag. I know it is his."

ANOTHER PARTY

Then one of the animals said, "Let us first punish Billy, for he helped to kill Bunny. Then we can all go and kill the Fox."

So they gave poor Billy to the Wolf. And the Wolf ate the Goat.

Then the King let the Wolf and Bruin out of jail.

He gave another party. It lasted ten days.

But Reynard did not come. He was afraid.

One day a little Rabbit ran in. There was blood on his face.

Another Party

He said, "O King, I have something to tell you. See what Reynard has done.

I was coming to see you. I came by Reynard's house.

Reynard was at his door. When he saw me, he came out to talk to

THE CROW'S STORY

Then a Crow came in and said, "O King, let me tell you what Reynard has done to me.

To-day my wife and I went to find something to eat.

On the way we saw Reynard in the road.

He looked as if he were dead.

I said, 'Why, is Reynard dead?' We went near to see if he were really dead.

My wife looked into his mouth. That was what he wanted, for he was not dead.

He jumped up and caught my wife.

Then he bit off her head.

Oh! Oh! If you had seen him eat her!"

The King was very angry.

He said, "I will not let Reynard live.

See how he does. Think of the lies he has told.

We will all go to his house and kill him."

THE BADGER GOES FOR REYNARD AGAIN

The Badger heard all this and ran off to tell Reynard.

He found Reynard by his house.

He had just caught two little birds. They had left their nest for the first time. But they were too little to fly, so Reynard caught them.

He said to the Badger, "How glad I am to see you!

Come in."

The Badger said, "I have not anything good to tell you.

The King is very angry with you. He says he will have you killed. The Rabbit and the Crow have told what you did to them."

"Is that all?" said Reynard. "I am not afraid.

The King will not do anything to me.

You will see.

Come into the house and get something to eat. When we have had a good sleep we will go to the King."

REYNARD TALKS TO THE BADGER

Reynard's wife did not want him to go. She said, "Do not go, Reynard.

I am afraid the King will kill you."

Reynard said, "Do not be afraid. The King will not hurt me. I shall come back soon."

Reynard talks to the Badger

So he and the Badger went to the King.

On the way Reynard said, "I think the King will let me go again.

But I have been very bad. I have told many lies.

I killed little Bunny, and ate him, too.

Then I sent his head in a bag to the King.

I made Billy take it.

I tried to kill the Rabbit, but he got away.

I could not help it. He looked so fat and good.

And I ate the Crow's wife. She walked right into my mouth."

REYNARD MEETS THE MONKEY

Near the King's house they met the Monkey. He said, "How do you do, Cousin Reynard? Do not be afraid."

"But I am afraid," said Reynard.
"The Crow and the Rabbit have told lies about me.

I don't care if I did hurt them. If only I can speak to the King, they will be sorry. I will pay them for their talk."

The Monkey said, "Well, I think I can help you.

Go on to the King's house. There you will see Mrs. Monkey. She is a friend of the King and the Queen.

Speak to her. She will tell you what to do."

Reynard was glad to hear this, and went on.

At last they came to the King's house. Reynard wished he were at home. But wishing did him no good.

He said, "O King, I hear the Rabbit and the Crow have been to you.

I know they told lies about me."

REYNARD'S STORY OF THE RABBIT

"Now I will tell you about the Rabbit.

He came by my house. He said he was hungry.

I told him to come into the house and I would give him something to eat.

I did not have much. But I gave him some bread and fruit.

He liked them and ate all he wanted.

Then my little son came in, to see if there was any fruit left.

You know how all boys like to eat!

Reynard's Story of the Rabbit

Just as he took some fruit the Rabbit hit him.

My big son did not like that. He jumped up and caught the Rabbit by the ear, and bit him.

I heard the noise and ran in. I made the boy let go, or he would have killed the Rabbit.

And now he says I hurt his ear. That is the way he thanks me!"

REYNARD'S STORY OF THE CROW

"As for the Crow, he tells a lie, too.

He told me his wife ate too much.

She ate a big fish, bones and all. And it killed her. I should think it would!"

- "That will do," said the King.
- "But where is little Bunny? You killed him.

Then you made Billy bring me Bunny's head.

I thought Billy did it, and I had him killed."

"What do you say?" said Rey-

I did not think Billy would do so. To kill little Bunny!"

But the King would not stay to hear Reynard talk.

He went to his room to think. He knew Reynard was telling lies again.

MRS. MONKEY AND REYNARD

Now Mrs. Monkey was in the King's house. She was a friend of Reynard.

The King liked her very much. He liked to hear her talk.

She saw the King was angry. So she went to his room.

She said, "May I speak to you. about Reynard?

I think he is right, and I would like to help him.

Let him go this time. I am sure you will be glad if you do."

But the King did not know what to do.

So he said to Mrs. Monkey, "I will see about it."

Then he went back.

All the animals were there to hear what he would say to Reynard.

He said, "Reynard, tell me, why did you kill Bunny?

Why did you send his head to me by Billy?"

THE RING

Reynard said, "I gave a ring to Bunny and Billy to bring to you.

Billy stole it. Then he killed Bunny so he could not tell you.

Oh, to think that ring is gone! We can never find it. I wanted my King to have it."

Then Mrs. Monkey said, "Why not look for it? I am sure the King will let you.

He will give you all the help you want. Tell us about it."

"Yes," said the King, "what was it like? Maybe we can find it."

"Oh, no," said Reynard. "No one who found it would ever give it up. It was made of gold. Nothing could hurt the one who wears it. It had in it a bright red stone.

At night the stone in the ring made it as light as day.

I found this ring in my father's cave. It was too good for any one but my King. So I sent it to him.

How angry my wife will be when she hears it is gone!"

THE COMB

"Then I had in that bag a present for your wife, a comb and a looking-glass.

I will tell you about the comb.

It was made of the bones of a little animal that smells very sweet. He smells so sweet that other animals find him by the smell.

The smell is so good it keeps one well. It is like roses and pinks.

On the comb was a large blue stone with pictures on it. The pictures were made of gold."

THE LOOKING-GLASS

"Now let me tell about the looking-glass.

If you looked in it, you could see anything you wanted to. You could see things miles away.

You could see as well at night as by day.

Who would not like to have such a looking-glass?

Who would not feel bad to lose it?
The frame was of wood, a foot wide. It was full of pictures.

There were gold letters to tell about the pictures.

I will tell you what some of the pictures were."

THE DONKEY AND THE DOG

"One was of a Man who had a Donkey and a Dog.

The Dog was very good, and the Man loved him. He sat at the table by the Man to eat.

Sometimes he sat on the Man's lap. Then he would wag his tail, and the Man would give him bread.

The Donkey saw all this. He said, 'Why does the Man like that Dog? He never works.

I have to work all the time. I do not have much to eat, but that Dog has all he wants.

The Donkey and the Dog

I will do as the Dog does. Maybe the Man will like me then, too.'

So he jumped into the Man's lap.

But the Man did not like it at all.

He said, 'Take the Donkey away. Kill him. I will not have him do so.'

So they took the Donkey away and shut him up."

THE WOLF AND THE CRANE

"Another picture was about a Wolf.

The Wolf got a bone in his throat. He could not get it out.

No one could get it out for him.

At last a Crane came along.

The Wolf said, 'Mr. Crane, do help me. Take this bone out of my throat. I will pay you anything you want.'

The Crane put his long bill down the Wolf's throat and took out the bone.

'My! How you hurt!' said the Wolf.

The Wolf and the Crane

'Well, the bone is out now. It will not hurt you again.

Now, if you will pay me, I will go.'

The Wolf said, 'I will not pay you.

You hurt me too much.

You ought to pay me for not biting off your head."

THE WOLF GETS ANGRY AGAIN

"It would take too long to tell of all the pictures.

But you can see any one would be glad to have such a lookingglass.

And now it is gone! Oh! Why did I give it to Billy?

And now he and Bunny are dead. And I loved them so!"

This is the way Reynard talked.

All who heard him thought he was telling the truth. The King thought so, too.

He wanted the ring and the comb and the looking-glass.

The Wolf gets Angry Again

So he said, "Reynard, go and look for these things.

Hunt everywhere for them. You may have all the help you want."

Then Reynard was glad, and said to the King, "I will go."

But the Wolf was very angry.

He said, "O King, Reynard is telling lies again. He was always mean and he is mean still."

THE WOLF WANTS TO FIGHT

"Let Reynard fight with me," said the Wolf.

"I will let him know he can not do so any more."

Reynard did not like to hear this.

He said to himself, "I am afraid to fight with the Wolf.

He is so big and I am so little. He will hurt me, I know.

But I do not want him to know I am afraid. So I will fight with him."

Then he said to the Wolf, "Yes, I will fight with you."

The King said they could fight the next day.

The Wolf wants to Fight

Then Reynard went to Mrs. Monkey for help.

He said, "Mrs. Monkey, what shall I do now? The Wolf wants to fight me. He is big and I am little. I am afraid he will hurt me."

"Don't be afraid, Reynard," said Mrs. Monkey. "I will tell you what to do, and you can win the fight."

So she told him what to do.

THE FIGHT

The next day all the animals came to see the fight. They made a big ring, so they could see it all.

When it was time, Reynard and the Wolf came out.

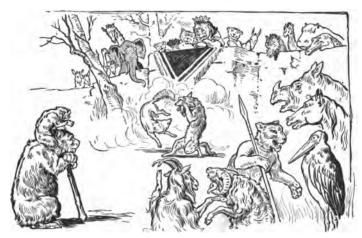

But how Reynard looked! He had done what Mrs. Monkey had told him to. He had shaved all his body but his tail.

Then he had put oil all over his body. So, when the Wolf caught him he could slip away.

Then he had his tail full of dust. When the Wolf came near, Reynard threw the dust in his eyes.

It hurt the poor Wolf's eyes so he could not see.

After a long fight, the King said, "This is not fair. Reynard shaved his hair. You two may fight again."

So the next day they came again. This time the Wolf was shaved, too.

All the animals thought Reynard would win.

THE LAST OF REYNARD

It was almost time to stop, when the Wolf took out his sword.

He hit Reynard, and Reynard fell down.

The animals all ran to see him. They saw the cut was a bad one, and Reynard was dead.

But what was their surprise to see Bunny jump out of the cut.

They put his head on and he was alive again.

Then the Crow jumped out of the dead Fox and told her story.

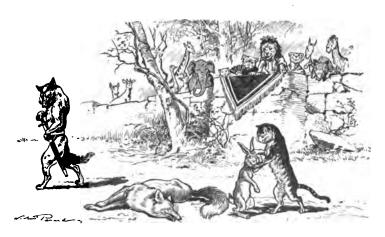

Then the Wolf said, "I am sorry

The Last of Reynard

I ate Billy. But I did not hurt him. I often feel him in me. Cut me in two."

They did, and out jumped Billy. Then they put the Wolf together again.

And all were happy because Reynard the Fox could not hurt them any more.

FAMOUS STORIES

FIFTY FAMOUS STORIES RETOLD. By JAMES BALDWIN 35 cents

This is a collection of the most famous tales of ancient and modern times; some historical and some legendary. Among them are the stories of King Alfred and the Cakes, Robin Hood, Bruce and the Spider, George Washington and his Hatchet, William Tell, How Napoleon Crossed the Alps, and other favorite stories for the young. The stories are told in a form that is easily intelligible to children, yet in no way distorted from the established versions.

OLD STORIES OF THE EAST. By JAMES BALDWIN . . 45 cents

The stories contained in this book are taken from the Hebrew Scriptures, and are among the most famous and most intensely interesting that the world has ever known. While it is neither possible nor desirable to omit allusions to their Scriptural origin, great care has been taken not to trespass on the domain of the religious teacher.

OLD GREEK STORIES. By James Baldwin . . . 45 cents

No other stories have been told more often or listened to with more pleasure than these classic tales of ancient Greece. They have become so incorporated into our own language and thought and so interwoven with our literature that they form almost as important a part of our intellectual life as they did that of the Greeks.

DEFOE'S ROBINSON CRUSOE

Adapted to School Purposes by KATE STEPHENS . . . 50 cents

From the date of its first appearance this has been one of the most widely read books in English fiction. It has here been made suitable for school and supplementary reading, but the editor has taken great care that the essential features of the work should in no way be changed,

STORIES FROM THE ARABIAN NIGHTS

Edited by M. CLARKE 60 cents

Of all the famous stories handed down to us from the past none has afforded more entertainment and delight to young and old of every land than these. Although the oldest stories in existence they are as fresh and interesting to-day as when they were first told. The best of these are here related with such skill as to preserve all their original charm and attractiveness, while adapting them in form and expression for school and home reading.

Copies of any of these books will be sent, prepaid, to any address on receipt of the price.

ELEMENTARY NATURE STUDY

Two stories by Jacob Abbott, revised, and in new and attractive form. They are admirably suited for young readers. The illustrations are

The object of these stories is to arouse the interest of children in certain representative individual animals, and by so doing to awaken a love for Natural History in general. The illustrations are attractive and true to life.

These recollections of a childhood spent on a northwestern farm aim to emphasize the attractiveness of life in the country, and to add to its charm by awakening an intelligent interest in its many activities.

Dana's Plants and Their Children 65 cents A series of easy lessons on the wonders of Plant Life, as entertaining for children as stories. These studies in nature are not only interesting and instructive in themselves, but they teach the child to see, to think, and to observe for himself.
Holder's Stories of Animal Life 60 cents This book is intended to serve either as a first book on Zoölogy or as a supplementary reader. The author has aimed to create in young students an enthusiastic interest in Nature Study by presenting some of the most remarkable phases of animal life.
Kelly's Short Stories of Our Shy Neighbors. 50 cents This book furnishes children with entertaining and instructive reading in the field of Natural History. It tells about the living creatures that dwell near us and yet are oftentimes strangers. It does this in the form of stories, written in a pleasing and attractive style, and copiously illustrated.
Monteith's Some Useful Animals 50 cents The subjects here treated assist both in Nature Study and in learning to read. The moral lessons derived from the actions of animals are vivid and engaging, and much useful and interesting information is imparted.
Needham's Outdoor Studies 40 cents This book is suitable for pupils in the intermediate or grammar grades. May be used as a guide for field work as well as a reader in Nature Study, and it will pave the way for more advanced text-book study and for laboratory work in the higher grades.
Pyle's Stories of Humble Friends 50 cents These stories are about animals and birds familiar to the children. They are simple in style and sympathetic in treatment. The many pictures, drawn by the author, are vividly illustrative of the incidents described.
Stokes s Ten Common Trees 40 cents A series of simple nature lessons for young children, familiarly treating and giving a few definite impressions of what trees are and how they live.

Historical Readings for the Young

EGGLESTON'S STORIES OF GREAT AMERICANS FOR LITTLE AMERICANS

Cloth, 12mo. 159 pages. Illustrated 40 cents

This book of stories is designed for young pupils of the Second Reader Grade. Its primary aim is to provide reading lessons that will excite attention and give pleasure and thus make the difficult task of learning to read easier. Another purpose is to interest children at an early age in the history of our country by making them familiar with its great characters and leading events. This is most effectively done in this little book by entertaining and instructive stories which every American child ought to know, and by vivid descriptions of scenes and incidents which pertain very largely to the childhood of the great actors represented.

The numerous illustrations that accompany the text have all been planned with special reference to awakening the child's attention, and they add greatly to the lessons and purpose of the book.

EGGLESTON'S STORIES OF AMERICAN LIFE AND ADVENTURE Cloth, 12mo. 214 pages. Illustrated . . . 50 cents

This book, which is intended for the Third Reader Grade, includes reading matter that is intensely interesting to the young—stories of Indian life, of frontier peril and escape, of pioneer adventure and Revolutionary daring, of dangerous voyages, explorations, etc. With these are interspersed sketches of the homes and firesides, the dress and manners, the schools and amusements of the early colonial and pioneer periods. The stories of this book represent in a general way every section of our country and every period of its history.

Copies of the above books will be sent, prepaid, to any address on receipt of the price by the Publishers:

Barnes's Natural Slant Penmanship

The system of writing represented in these new copy books combines all the advantages of the vertical with the speed and beauty of regular slant writing.

It is well known that an extreme slant tends to angularity, while vertical writing is usually slow and tends to an unsightly back-hand or irregular slant. If left to themselves, without specific directions, children naturally fall into a certain slant in writing,—intermediate between vertical and slant writing. This natural slant has been adopted as the standard in these copy books.

Forms of Letters.—Natural Slant copies are designed to be written, not printed. They have the simplicity and the full, round, open style of the best vertical forms, but avoid some of the extremes and eccentricities that have characterized that style of writing. In every instance the form of capital employed has been selected, first, because of its legibility; second, because of its ease of execution; and third, because of its graceful form. Every copy is sensible and significant, and as nearly as possible the subject matter relates to topics which interest the pupils of the grades for which the respective books are intended. In other words, the writing exercises are made to correlate with the other branches of study pursued in the schools.

THE SERIES includes Books A, B, C, and D, small size, illustrated, to be written with pen or pencil, and Books 1 to 8, full size, the first two books illustrated. A set of penmanship WALL CHARTS in four sheets is published to accompany this series of copy books.

RODDY'S GEOURAPHIES

Roddy's Elementary Geography - - Price 50 Cents Roddy's Complete Geography - - - Price $1.00

By H. JUSTIN RODDY, M.S.

Department of Geography, First Pennsylvania State Normal School

THIS SERIES has been prepared to meet a distinct demand for new geographies which are thoroughly up to date and adapted for general use in ordinary schools rather than for a particular use in a highly specialized and organized ideal system.

They are distinctive in the following important particulars:

- I. An adequate amount of material is included in each book to meet the needs of those grades for which it is designed.
- 2. The subject-matter is presented so simply that the pupil can readily understand it, and so logically that it can be easily taught by the average teacher.
- 3. Just enough physiography is included to develop the fundamental relations of geography and to animate and freshen the study without overloading it in this direction.
- 4. The simplicity of the older methods of teaching this subject is combined with just so much of the modern scientific methods of presentation as is thoroughly adapted to elementary grades.
- 5. The physical maps of the grand divisions are drawn to the same scale, thus enabling the pupils to form correct concepts of the relative size of countries.
- 6. The political and more detailed maps are not mere skeletons, giving only the names which are required by the text, but are full enough to serve all ordinary purposes for reference. In addition, they show the principal railroads and canals, the head of navigation on all important rivers, and the standard divisions of time.
- 7. The illustrations are new and fresh, reproduced mostly from photographs collected from all parts of the world with a view to helping out and explaining the text and not for mere embellishment.
- 8. To secure proper practice in map reading, formal map studies or questions have been inserted with each map, directing attention to the most important and essential features.

Correspondence regarding the examination and introduction of Roddy's Geographies is cordially invited and will receive prompt attention.

BARNES 5 NEW HISTORIES OF THE UNITED STATES

BARNES'S ELEMENTARY HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

BARNES'S SCHOOL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

Thoroughly revised and brought down to date. Half leather, 8vo, 432 pages. With maps and illustrations .

1.00

THESE standard and popular histories have been thoroughly modernized, both as to appearance and contents. They offer present-day views of history and methods of teaching. The larger book has been revised in every particular, and the smaller one entirely rewritten by that charming and well-known writer for children, Dr. James Baldwin.

The Elementary History tells the story of the country in a series of biographies of important men as recommended by the Committee of Fifteen. The incidents narrated show the manners of the time, and the stories are all intensely interesting. The numerous illustrations form an important aid to the understanding of the text.

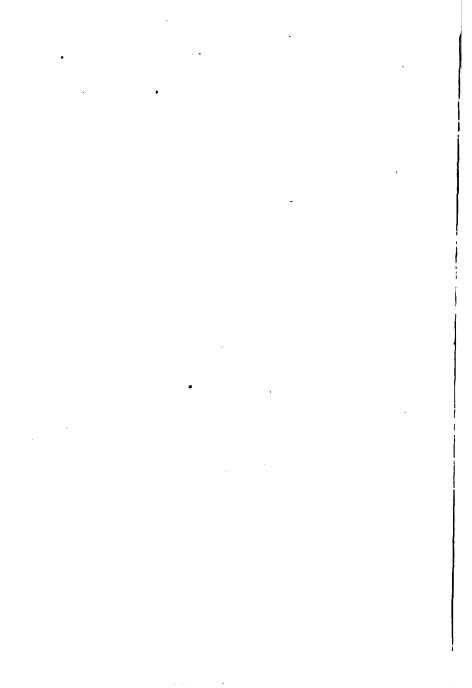

In the School History, while the fascinating literary style and the remarkably successful distinctive features of the original volume have been retained, greater prominence has been given to industrial and social development. References for collateral reading have been inserted at frequent intervals, and many new maps and pictures introduced.

Write for illustrated descriptive circular.
